XXX is an ECE student at Duke University. On Friday night, he had finished the RSVP project for ECE590 course and found nothing else to do. While he was browsing the website casually, he suddenly found himself interested in boxing. However, he didn't know where to start with zero foundation. Therefore, he asked his friend if they could teach him boxing. However, none of his friends has experience before, and they are still struggling with the Project for ECE590. So, XXX was very frustrated and don't know who can help him with boxing.....

At the same time, YYY, a Chemistry student at Duke University, just finished his capstone design and had a lot of free time to spare. By recommendation from his roommate, he download an APP called Peer Tutoring from Google Play Store and tried to find something interesting. Since he had learnt boxing before, he add "boxing" to his profile and set the available time and location for his tutor class.....

On Saturday, XXX found the Peer Tutoring APP from Duke University Webpage and tried to find any helpful course for himself. After he edited his profile, he pressed the "search tutor" button. Then he was directed to a form with class title, time and location. He filled in the form quickly and saw the filtered result: a list of boxing tutor class given by other users. He set the filtering option and randomly picked the guy called YYY. So, he sent a message through the chatting window, asking for a reservation of boxing tutoring class. About half an hour later, he was notified by the reply from the boxing tutor. The tutor agreed to give a boxing class at Duke Stadium this afternoon for free and ended the conversation.

After finishing the boxing class, XXX came back to home and give a five-star comment on his tutor. He learnt a lot of basic techniques in boxing and made friend with his tutor YYY.
